COURSE DESCRIPTION

Excelling in the cultural and creative industry presents a significant challenge to participants worldwide due to its unique characteristics, which include high levels of uncertainty, creativity, and locality. However, this industry is also highly compelling due to its spiritual empowerment and its essential role in human society. This course aims to provide a comprehensive understanding of the industry's nature, innovation processes, business model evolution, and how value is created in capital markets from both storytelling and valuation perspectives.

Leveraging the extensive experience of the lecturer, who has led many high-profile transactions within the cultural and creative industry, students will gain insights into the characteristics of both the industry and capital markets. They will master the fundamental aspects of the industry and, crucially, various storytelling and valuation techniques. Enriched with case studies from different verticals of the industry, students will be also able to integrate relevant skills with their managerial experiences to develop high-quality corporate proposals, thereby preparing for upcoming business development and capital market activities.

Additionally, students will enhance their communication, analytical, and teamwork skills through rigorous case discussions and group exercises and presentation.

COURSE OBJECTIVES

1. Understand the characteristics of the cultural and creative industry
2. Understand innovations and business model evolution during stages of corporate development
3. Master relevant story telling as well as valuation techniques as a result of value creation in the industry
4. Gain insights into various investment stories of different verticals and how they are structured and valued
5. Master the characteristics, mechanisms of different capital markets and how investors' views on value
6. Use what students have learned to create their corporate presentations based on individual and team efforts
